Puffy Belleclair, a wealthy idler, is in love with Mildred Small, daughter of the owner of Small Dairy, who receives a letter from Mr. Carnation, head of the Milk Trust, threatening him with ruin unless he sells out to the trust. Carnation hires Small's milkman and Puffy volunteers to milk the cows. He tries to milk a bull and is kicked out of the barn. Carnation gets a swarm of bees and feeds them dynamite; one of them lights on the cow's flank and it explodes when Puffy swats it. The cow runs away, dragging Puffy. Puffy delivers the milk and gives his photograph with each bottle. A cat looks at the photo and arches its back. Carnation tries the love lure to best his successful rival. A husband returns to his house to kiss his wife goodbye. Her back is turned to him. She orders four quarts. He waits for the milkman and knocks him out.

Carnation unhitches Puffy's milk horse and substitutes a race horse. The horse races through the street and refuses to stop until a couple of boys stretch a tape across the road. The horse thinks the race is over when he reaches the tape. He stops suddenly, throwing Puffy out. Puffy goes in business with Small and marries Mildred.
